Not illustrated. 1897 Excerpt: .rays were under observation ebonite cells were employed, the faces of which were covered by quartz plates, cemented to the ebonite by gold size. Some comparative experiments on the effect of glass and quartz as the covering of the cells, were detailed by the author at the meeting of the British Association at Oxford in 1894. Ward, op. oil. MDCCCXCV11.--B. Z In a few experiments the diastasic solutions were mixed with agar-agar, at a temperature at which the agar-agar was on the point of gelatinisation, and the mixture poured over a flat glass dish, on which it almost immediately formed a film a few millimetres in thickness. The uncovered side was then illuminated. After the exposure, equal volumes of the exposed and unexposed extracts were mixed with a preparation of starch and digested either at the laboratory temperature, or in an incubator at about 38 C. When the hydrolysis was fairly advanced, both digestions were boiled simultaneously and the products of hydrolysis ascertained by titration with Fehling s fluid. In the earlier experiments a weak starch paste (1 per cent.) was employed, but this was afterwards abandoned in favour of a 1 per cent, solution of soluble starch prepared by Lintnee s method. Some diy potato starch was mixed with hydrochloric acid of 12 per cent, strength, and left in contact with the acid for some days. It was then strained off and dialysed in running water till all traces of the acid had disappeared. The...
