Excerpt: :the name of disposing a.fl im t.1/. 4th. Two or more compounds being placed in circumstances, suitable for bringing into play the respective afluinities of their component parts; either there is a change and new products formed without our being able to determine which is the most powerful afluinity under which they act, or the first composition remains, contrary to the order indicated by the superior afluinity of the principle of one of the component parts to the afluinity of the other. In these two cases we say that they are not the relations of afluinity of one body to another, but afluinities of concourse, otherwise called double afluinities; in a word, the sum of all the united afluinities which are needed to explain these phenomena. Two bodies being put in contact, the compound which results is supercompounded, or united with an excess of one of the principles. This tendency to supercomposition, is sometimes so strong, that when the least afluinity of a third body interferes with it, the proportions of the first compound are changed, and the neutral state destroyed. This tendency may cause the production of crystals, with excess of base, in an acid liquor. To distinguish this force, we shall call it the afluinity of a compound for an excess of one of its constituents, or for shortness, afluinity qfezvcess, which will be enough to recall the idea when it has been well grasped. However paradoxical some of these propositions may...
