Createspace, United States, 2014. Paperback. Book Condition: New. Victoria M Potter (illustrator). 229 x 152 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Self-sufficient Texas Eugenia Thornhill espouses many rebellions, including giving a man-any man-authority over her heart, or her life. She hates the mother who named her Texas after her birth state instead of loving her enough to give her a real name. She hates the mother who ran off and left her young child with a cold, emotionless father. Texas likes to brag that she s not afraid of anything-not even spiders or snakes. Her boast proves empty when she meets childhood friend West Strom and realizes that she is deathly afraid of shadows, but is clueless as to why. Time and again she shatters their nascent romance by mindlessly shrieking and running out of her childhood home, fleeing the shadows that terrify her. Pranksters also seem intent on sabotaging the relationship. A dead raccoon is hung on the refrigerator, a rock is thrown through the window, furniture is trundled around the room in total disarray, then righted again before West arrives to investigate. Texas is tricked into holding a seance. West, a strong Christian, is appalled that Texas is involved in witchcraft. That almost ends their friendship. But the most destructive force entering her life proves to be the seemingly harmless fun of frequenting a Texas dancehall with Thornhill Ranch manager Jason Peace. She finds herself accused of murder and forced into hiding. When she escapes and clears her name, it only adds to the dystopia at the ranch. Texas exhibits her paintings in a feminist art show in San Antonio and meets her mother. Her mother apologizes, but does not explain her abandonment. When they say goodbye, Texas is saying goodbye to a...
