

I climbed a mountain in the dark of the night. There were creepy, crawly ones On the way up but I was unaware of them because of the darkness. Upon reaching the summit, there was a honeycomb with large bees inside. The bees were dormant — there were eight bees in all. As I started to climb over the last rock to stand on the summit, I noticed cobwebs in my hair and a large, furry spider on my chest. I tried to brush it off but it wouldn't go. I wasn't worried — I knew I'd encountered many spiders and such on my way up but I was unaware of them because of the dark. I knew I could not safely descend the mountain, in the dark or even in the dawn's light that seemed to be breaking — The steep rock face would not let me safely descend; nor the creepy, crawly ones To be encountered. The only thing to do was to go on. There was a cave — Only in the cave, the cave on the summit, with a tunnel of light at the end.

They Got the Bee But Not the Hive
