Every thing succeeds according to my most sanguine wishes, and the sunshine of success gilds my prosters. I begin to hope, that I shall go through this enterprize without a single disappointment; what a novelty will that be to me! When I take a retrospective view of my life, I find misfortune ushering in every great event; but I think she is now tired of her office, and means to give me some little respite: that she may never cross your path, -is the sincere prayer of him, who, with the truest affection, bids you adieu, and must ever remain Your grateful V. LUNARDJ. LETTER III. Edinburgh, Sept. 28. 1785, My Dear Guardian, SHARE my joy; participate my pleasures! ScotLand cannot boast a happier man than your friend. I can assure you, that I rife some inches taller to take a more extensive view of my delightfuj prospects! Does not your minds eye behold me, soaring on raptures bright wings to the summit of happiness, and laughing at the clouds of care below C You You will say, and with reason, (pardon the pun), that 1 am flighty: but how, my dear, dear friend, how can I help it, when my spirits are light as the soft Gossamour that floats on the summer breeze I shall- indubitably ascend from the very place I wisti. My valuable friend, Mr. Erskine, has called a meeting of all the inhabitants of Georges Square, who are now in...
