Preparing for Todays Global Job Market: From the Lens of Color

By Christopher Robinson-Easley

Palgrave MacMillan. Hardcover. Book Condition: New. Hardcover. 224 pages. Dimensions: 8.6in. x 5.4in. x 0.7in.Worldwide, people are being forced out of their respective job markets. New college graduates are entering a global job market that has dramatically changed its rules of engagement, and entrepreneurs are challenged to develop new mindsets. Yet, in all situations there is either a total lack of or inconsistency in communications regarding the call for new competencies and skills that frame these new rules of employment engagement. Via a detailed interpersonal and intra-personal change model, Preparing for Todays Global Job Market identifies and delineates a methodology for effectively positioning andor repositioning oneself in todays global job market that moves significantly beyond strategies associated with simply developing a resume, cover letter or business plan. Robinson-Easley also engages business executives, human resource professionals and training and development personnel in a conversation that suggests a different dialogue ensue between employers and their employees when organizations need to upgrade their workforce competencies and skillsa conversation that serves as a roadmap for better aligning organizational effectiveness and change to todays requisite core competencies and skills.
